mation, by which the Popes reduced, through the superstitious fears of the people, individuals and States, to the most abject submission to their will. In the middle age it was the most terrible blow which could be inflicted upon the people or the Prince. Spiritual services ceased; the churches were shut up; the sacraments were no longer administered; the dead were buried without funeral rites; and all the ministry of the church which was then believed to he the only channel of sulvation was forbidden to be exercised. These interdicts were used by the bishops, as early as A. D. 870, but the first memorable occasion on which this method of warfare was adopted, was the marriage of King Robert of France, with Bertha his cousin, when Gregory V., A. D. 933 issued an interdiet against the whole country, and compelled the sovereign to dissolve the union. The ban under which England was laid, in the reign of John, by Pope Innocent III, is well known to the readers of history .--The latest pretension to the exercise of chia power, we believe, was by Pope Pius gation at Madrid, vice H. J. Perry, recall-VII, when he issued an inefficient decree against Napoleon A. D. 1809. In 1170 Pope Alexander III, also put England under an interdict, forbidding the clergy to perform any part of divine service, except abus, who were deprived of fire and weter; French Poney.
